Grade Descriptions

1. Oral Component

1.1. Communicative Task:

Completion of Task:

Grade A: The whole task is successfully completed without difficulty. The candidate can cope with complications. Well-sustained performance within limits of resources. Prepared to take initiative. Able to respond and react appropriately to almost any question or comment. Shows good conversational skills (e.g. ability to react, to maintain and direct the conversation, to use appropriate tone and level of directness). Uses imagination and tact where appropriate. Able to convey some subtleties (e.g. reluctant acceptance, compromise).

Grade C: Nearly all the task is successfully completed with a good level of initiative and response most of the time. Capable of responding at some length, keeping the momentum going. Able to qualify statements and responses and to react appropriately to the examiner on most occasions. Can usually cope with complications. Generally fluent. A good range of vocabulary.

Grade E: Capable of a reasonable response but some clarification may be needed and the candidate may not always convey meaning clearly. Candidate's response may reveal occasional misunderstanding of the examiner's comments. A patchy performance. Still has a tendency to rely on the examiner and to be rather brief in reply. Vocabulary range reasonable but still a little limited.

1.2. Language:

Grade A: Very few grammatical errors. Able to handle quite complex language, including range of structures.

Grade C: Mostly accurate. Obviously has a sound grasp of grammatical elements in spite of the occasional lapse. Some success in attempting more adventurous structures (e.g. passives, conditionals, subjunctive, adverbial subordinate clauses).

Grade E: Fairly accurate. Some inconsistency involving some serious elementary errors. Some attempt to use wider range of structures (e.g. adverbial subordinate clauses, passives, conditionals) but not necessarily always successful.

1.3. Topic presentation and discussion:

1.3.1. Range of expression:

Grade A: Confident use of articulate language appropriate to conveying well-developed and thoughtful ideas. Very much at home in the language.

Grade C: Uses more ambitious linguistic structures, verb tenses with some confidence (e.g. passives, subjunctives). Clear attempt to link. Sounds unforced. Good knowledge of topic-specific vocabulary. Beginning to use idiom.

Grade E: Able to vary sentence construction (e.g. beginning occasionally with qualifying clauses). Attempts to use more complex structures (e.g. object pronouns, common use of subjunctive). Some maltesisms/anglicisms in expression and perhaps some clumsiness and weakness in linking ideas, though vocabulary mostly adequate to task.

1. 4. Content:

Grade A: Gives a fluent and confident rendering of the subject matter. Obviously knows the subject well. Shows initiative and shares some responsibility for keeping the momentum going. Is able to react to examiner's questions and interventions, and is able to adjust utterances in the light of these. Can express complex and abstract ideas if appropriate to the subject. Shows some ability to present arguments and evidence in support of claims, and to present counter-arguments to examiner's comments where appropriate. Able to demonstrate some awareness of distinction between fact and opinion. Able to extend topic well.

Grade C: Able to talk at some length about the subject, not merely on a factual level. Can give opinions and defend them, although not always with complete consistency. Able to react to examiner's questions and interventions appropriately and with some imagination. Takes some initiative. Able to extend topic well, e.g. apply ideas to a new but related situation. Knows the subject quite well.

Grade E: Patchy. Able to converse on a descriptive, factual or narrative level, but revealing some gaps. Some attempts to give an opinion, but rather inconsistent. Not always able to respond appropriately to the examiner's questions. At the lower level, still tends to rely largely on the examiner and is rather brief in response to comments or questions. Finds it difficult to extend topic in response to questions, e.g. to apply ideas to a new but related situation. A competent performance which does not go beyond the descriptive, factual or narrative.

2. Writing Component

2.1. Language:

Grade A: Good knowledge of idiom. Rich and sensitive use of language (adjectives, adverbs, verbs). Displays ability to select unexpected words. Demonstrates thorough knowledge of topic-specific vocabulary.

Grade C: Varied and interesting vocabulary. Some evidence of appreciation of idiom. Nearly all vocabulary correctly used. Sound topic-specific vocabulary.

Grade E: Some variation in choice of vocabulary/ability to produce synonyms. Sound general vocabulary, but limited topic-specific vocabulary.

2.2 Range of expression:

Grade A: Confident use of complex sentence patterns and linguistic structures. Uses articulate language appropriate to conveying well-developed and thoughtful ideas, without the style appearing too forced.

Grade C: Uses more ambitious linguistic structures, verb tenses with some confidence (e.g. passives, more complex use of subjunctives), or very creditable attempt to use ambitious language but style very cumbersome or heavily overworked. May include some rhetorical devices such as exclamation, question. Clear attempt to link. Essay reads easily.

Grade E: Able to vary sentence construction (e.g. beginning occasionally with subordinate clauses). Attempts to use more complex structures (e.g. object pronouns, common use of subjunctive) but some weakness in linking. Some maltesisms/anglicisms in expression and perhaps some clumsiness.

2.3. Accuracy:

Grade A: Can handle quite complex language with few errors.

Grade C: May contain a few basic errors and show weakness in one or two specific areas, but none the less generally accurate in handling of more complex areas of grammar (e.g. irregular verbs, difficult tenses – passives, conditional perfect, word order in complex clause structures).

Grade E: Quality of accuracy is inconsistent. Basic grammar generally mastered (verb endings, adjectival agreements), but weakness in more difficult areas (e.g. tense and mood, irregular verb forms, prepositions). Or, very accurate but simple language.

2.4. Content:

2.4.1. Structure of essay/paragraphing:

Grade A: Well balanced and coherent piece, with good sense of overall perspective. Ideas clearly linked throughout.

Grade C: Competent structure, with logical progression of ideas/presentation of material.

Grade E: Ideas generally expressed in an appropriately structured form, but not always linked.

2.4.2. Relevance to question title:

Grade A: Clearly relevant throughout.

Grade C: Relates comments on the subject clearly to the question/title and answers it thoroughly. Some omissions but most areas covered adequately.

Grade E: Has a competent, even thorough, knowledge of the subject area, but only loosely connects it to the question/title. May refer to the question in the introduction and conclusion or may give good coverage of a limited number of points.

2.4.3. Analysis and development of ideas:

Grade A: All ideas well developed. Understands implications of subject and draws sensible conclusions, where appropriate. Work likely to demonstrate interesting/unusual/original insights into subject.

Grade C: Most ideas developed. Some attempt to examine implications/draw conclusions where appropriate. Can give opinions and develop them although not always with complete consistency.

Grade E: Contains well worn ideas, occasionally expanded with some qualification. Unlikely to contain analysis of implications. Rather dull and pedestrian. Analysis tends to be tortuous. Some attempt to give an opinion, but rather inconsistent.

2.4.4. Factual content/illustration:

Grade A: Very detailed fully supported answer, demonstrating thorough knowledge of the subject. Non-discursive work illuminated by imaginative use of detail. Occasionally uses unusual/less obvious illustrations.

Grade C: Points nearly always supported by factual information (e.g. statistics, precise references, specific examples, quotations). Imaginative/descriptive work well supported by detail.

Grade E: Covers the basic factual content of the subject adequately with a reasonable range of examples/illustrations/detail.
